Upon moving to New Orleans, South Carolina native and filmmaker, Lynda Marks asked new friend and photographer, Pete Moeller, to document her experience as a descendant of slaves and a city resident. "Pete was working on a story about New Orleans music when we happened to talk and he had mentioned that he'd been doing this photography project," Marks says. "I said that I wanted to do a project in New Orleans that represented a snapshot of black culture as it's been shaped by slavery and its aftermath." The African American History Project was born — and the project never looked the same after that first chance encounter. Marks, Moeller, and producer Gary Biddick spent weeks on the streets, chipping away at the project. Eventually, the film emerged with the point-of-view and voice of a black New Orleanian, one who could capture the spirit of what it's like to be a young black man in the city. "We went out and we walked and took notes and we talked to people in their homes," says Marks. "The question we asked was �
