The transport of surface waves by a wedge-shaped hole that has an in-plane fixed geometry and has no axial symmetry is investigated. It is shown that the effects of the fixed geometry and the axial asymmetry on the distribution of the scattered wave field in the plane wave reference frame depend on the location of the guided wave beam. We predict a peaked scattering pattern, a modulated scattering, a scattering in a wedge-shaped area, and a localized scattering. Moreover, it is demonstrated that in some cases the transverse transport is locally hindered by the presence of the hole. In such cases, the scattering patterns exhibit periodic fluctuations that occur in time., 772 P.2d at 1140. definition." Ibid. Here, however, the trial court expressly ruled that defendants did not have exclusive possession of the iron. Aplt.App. at 2a-3a. Accordingly, Kesten's recovery was limited by statute to "damages in an amount of up to ten thousand dollars." *557 [¶ 17] In Smith v. Apple, Inc., 670 P.2d 771 (Alaska 1983), the Supreme Court of Alaska applied § 972 to a claim for property damage in an airplane crash arising out of a collision. In Smith, the injured parties brought separate actions in state court against the manufacturer and the owner of the aircraft. The manufacturer cross-claimed against the owner. The Alaska Court held that the manufacturer's cross-claim against the owner for tortious conduct, which was subsequently dismissed, had not been extinguished by a settlement between the manufacturer and the injured parties. The court reasoned that "[t]o deny the right of recovery to the manufacturer would be to give plaintiffs windfalls and the manufacturer none at all." Id. at 775. [¶ 18] The Smith Court did not use the word "exclusive," but it is clear that the Court was referring to Kesten's argument that the exclusive possession clause of the UCC bars a tort claim against a bailee. 670 P.2d at 775. Noting that the focus was on the ten-thousand dollar cap on recovery,
